47 Rōnin: A Tale of Honor and Loyalty opens at Newfields July 19

INDIANAPOLIS, June 17, 2019—The exhibition 47 Rōnin: A Tale of Honor and Loyalty examines one of the most popular tales of vengeance and loyalty in Japan. The exhibition uses woodblock prints from the Indianapolis Museum of Art at Newfield’s permanent collection to explore the ancient story of a group of 47 leaderless samurai, rōnin, who killed a government official that they blamed for the death of their lord. When they surrendered, they were ordered to commit seppuku, a form of Japanese ritual suicide.

The prints illustrate main and side stories exploring why this tale of murder and vengeance remains so popular. Utagawa Kunikyo II (act. L. 19c) illustrates 12 of the most popular acts from the dramatic version of the story titled, Chūshingura. His prints are augmented with versions by other artists to express the many iterations the story has taken throughout history. Imaginary portraits of the participants by Tsukioka Yoshitoshi (1839–1892), a great depicter of action figures, are also included in the exhibition.

Dr. John Teramoto, Curator of Asian Art at the Indianapolis Museum of Art explains, “A good story profits from an evil villain. In this story, the dramatic narrative has far overshadowed the actual historical incident.” He hopes that by sharing side stories that feature wives and mothers, fathers and sons of the men who tragically sacrificed themselves, guests will connect to the humanized story and find that it proves more attractive than just the facts.

47 Rōnin: A Tale of Honor and Loyalty is part of Seasons of Japan, a year-long celebration of Japanese art and culture at Newfields. Guests are encouraged to supplement their visit to 47 Rōnin by visiting Nihontō: The Samurai Sword which explores the beautiful and practical Japanese weapon referenced throughout 47 Rōnin. Fashion Redefined: Miyake, Kawakubo, Yamamoto is another can’t-miss exhibition that features contemporary garments from legendary Japanese designers. Make sure to stop by Pop Up: Noodle Shop, a curated culinary experience just steps away from the IMA Galleries.

The exhibition will be on display from July 19 through November 17, 2019.
